

It's Not an Adventure Until Something Goes Wrong...

Description

So often, these days, people go seeking “adventure” except that they spend so much time and money beforehand, ensuring that nothing goes wrong, that by the time the “adventure” happens, it’s no longer an adventure. In light of this, I have long held to the motto, “It’s not an adventure until something goes wrong”.

Well, as we launched our primitive overnight camping trip, it was an “adventure” from the start...

Since I was a child, I have loved stories about the famous outlaws and woodland dwellers of history: people like Robin Hood, William Wallace and Francis Marion who fought oppression from deep within their forest dwellings. Other characters like Aragorn and Faramir from The Lord of the Rings series had similar roles and are referred to as Rangers.

So, when I decided I wanted to start designing costumes, “rangers” was a good first concept to get under my belt. We have had many variations over the years, but with the help of Fabrics-Store, we recently gave our ranger outfits an overhaul.

As these are hunters, woodsmen and warriors that live deep in the forest, we wanted to build more practical and less elaborate kits for them to use. Our color palette was simple, the natural greens, browns and tans so often found in the forest.

It was a good thing we made these more practical too, because after forecasting clear skies all week, it started raining as soon as we stepped in to the forest. So the “adventure” part started from the beginning.

We all played the role of “combat cameraman” at different times during the adventure, but most of the photos were taken by Will and Charles.

The first and most useful garment in a ranger’s wardrobe is a cloak. Not only are they useful for hiding the hunter in the forest, but they dramatically delay the a thorough soaking when it rains! We made these out of Teak, Olive and Chestnut linen.

(I like to leave the bottom hem unfinished as it provides a cool worn and ragged look!)

Rangers top-to bottom: I love using green as the base for our rangers (probably from all that reading about Robin Hood and his men wearing Lincoln Green) so we used Emerald and Olive Green for these two tunics. We used some well washed and softened Root Beer brown (almost black) for the neck wraps/face masks.

Ginger is another color I like to include in my ranger kits as it breaks up all the dark browns and weathers nicely as seen with this tunic!

As we were very quickly getting more damp than is really enjoyable in the clearing, we headed for the denser trees and looked for a site to pitch our camp. After an hour of enduring the steady drizzle, we found the perfect spot and hastily unloaded our packs and got canvas over our heads!

Of course, as soon as we got our shelters up, the rain stopped, but we now had a camp and it was time to get comfortable! After finding some dry wood and some carefully preserved tinder we brought with us, we quickly had a nice little blaze going.

With warmth and shelter provided for, we hung up our wet cloaks to dry and I began cooking supper while the other rangers enjoyed a quiet pipe as darkness began to fall.

As part of our re-design, we used linen instead of leather for our rangers vests and coats, here you can see the short-sleeved jackets made of heavyweight Chocolate and Potting Soil brown linen.

I began with potatoes, onions and a (carefully un-bruised) pepper, then added some delicious beefsteaks (surely purchased from a local farmer at the nearest market town).

Our meal was delicious; I'm getting hungry again just writing about it!

With our meal eaten, it was cleanup and off to our bedrolls for some much-needed sleep! We did wake in the middle of the night from a donkey's scream. If you have not heard that sound before, it is terrifying, so much so it was used as the Black Rider's cry in the Lord of the Rings films! Despite our familiarity with the sound, it did cause us to stay awake for more than a few minutes. Just a little more “adventure” to our night!

I rose in the early dawn to re-light the fire as the sleepyheads in the other shelter slept on. Their loss! I got first taste of the morning coffee! (Yes, this is a fantasy world in which the rangers drink coffee because they get grumpy if they don't).

With the coals renewed on the fire, I set to cooking breakfast with a will as the other rangers tore down camp.

It was potatoes baked in the ashes, eggs, (carefully carried out in a box), sausage and flatbread with jam for breakfast.

With full stomachs, dry clothes and aided by caffeine, we packed up and walked out in the beautiful sunlight of a new spring day!

That's it for our adventure! Our new, more practical clothing worked like a dream. When you have weather, bugs, animals, and potential for roving bands of orcs, having gear that helps and does not hinder you can make the difference in survival (well, at least a more comfortable camping trip).

What clothing would you like to make for an "adventure"?

Feel Free to let us know how you liked the post and thank you for joining us on our adventure.
