

Pattern Review: Nico Slip Dress in Midweight Linen

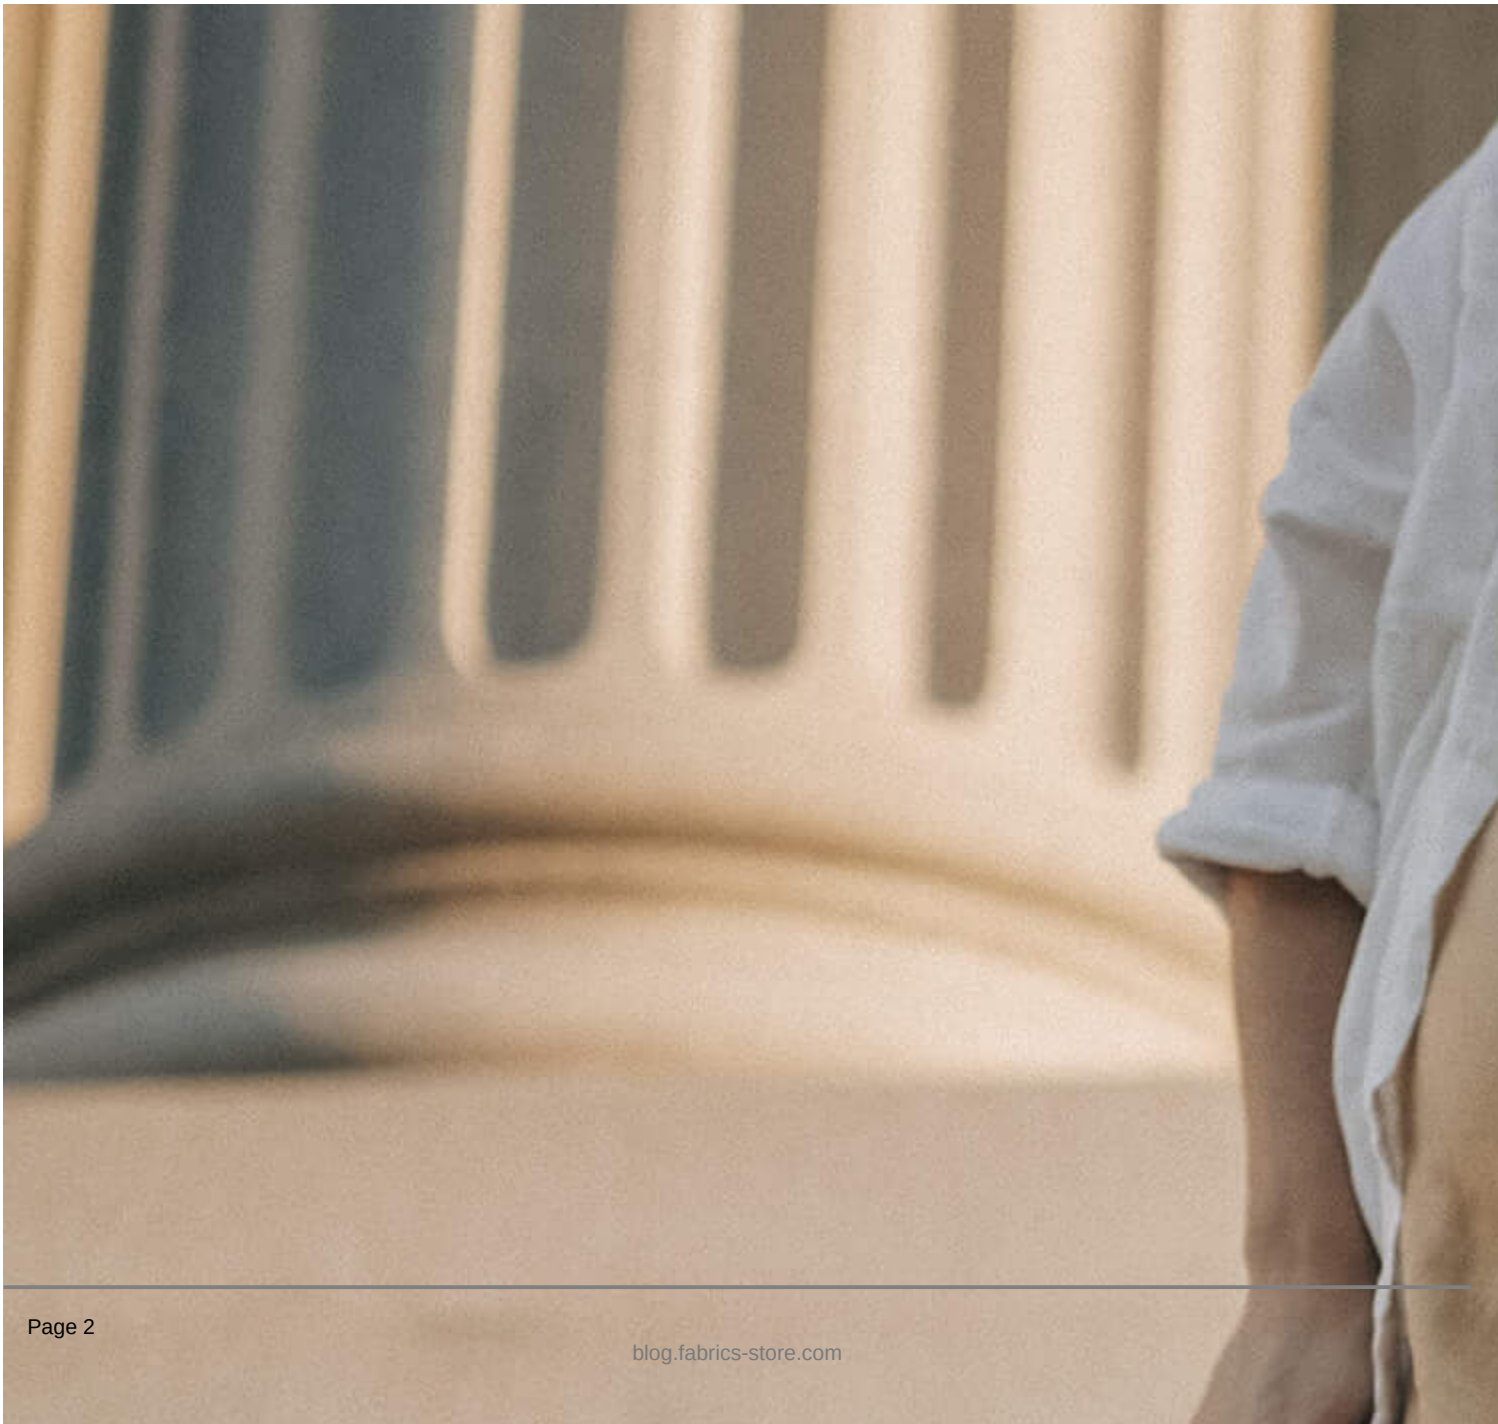

Description

Nico dress made with FS New Wheat Midweight Linen fabric

Today you can allow yourself to play with the style of slip dresses. What should I match the dress with? A slip dress in cold weather goes well with knitted clothes (sweater, turtleneck), and coats and jackets are worn over it. In warm seasons, a shirt and a T-shirt are combined with such a model.

Making your own slip dresses allows you to use many different finishing methods and combine them with your own style and figure â?? fabric, length, cuts, cutouts, straps â?? the list goes on. Once you nail one, you can use it as a base pattern to play around and keep creating different types.

Nico dress goes perfectly with other linen items in my wardrobe and is suitable for every day. This is a great basic dress. I am 25 weeks pregnant and this dress looks greaton a pregnant belly. And since I donâ??t like to buy special clothes for pregnant women, this pattern turned out to be a godsend for me.

As for tailoring, you can sew this dress in 3-4 hours with coffee breaks, which is also an absolute plus, in a few hours you can make yourself an amazing linen dress.

I would also like to note that I shortened each strap by about 2.5 inches, I did not make any other changes.

The dress is cut on the bias (at an angle of 45 degrees), which gives the dress a pleasant fluidity, draping around the body.

For Nico dress, I chose medium-weight linen in New Wheat color and am very pleased with how it looks, a calm natural color is easy to combine, although this dress model will look great in other colors, including juicy and bright!

I already have ideas for sewing other models from using Niko pattern, this is, of course, a short slip dress and a tank top.
