

Curated By You: Tara Viggo Makes Paper Theory Miller Trousers

Description

Whilst preparing the interviews for Curated by You, one name, or rather one pattern kept popping up- namely the Zadie Jumpsuit. This prompted me to do a little research, and I was rather thrilled to find out that not only was Tara Viggo living in London as am I, but we happen to share a couple of friends through our love for sport. Coincidentally Tara and I met yesterday at a local market and she was indeed as genuine, beautifully radiant and charming as I imagined her to be. This incident of connection is one predominant reason I decided to embark upon the Curated By You series. I was once told by Yvonne Fuchs, a business mentor and dear friend, that everyone you need to grow your business is already in your vicinity of connections, the lesson is to uncover your goals and overcome the fear of reaching out. She pointed to the room and said- within this group you will find a designer, a lawyer, an illustrator, a copy writer, a photographer- all you have to do is connect and work out how you may help each other. Alot of the time we are struck by fear or embarrassment, which prevents us from connecting to those individuals we admire, thus robbing us of opportunity to get to know another beautiful human who may one day become a partner, a collaborator or even a friend.

Tara wears Paper Theory Miller trousers made with FS NATURAL Softened Heavy Weight Linen

Tell us a bit about yourself and what you do.

My name is Tara Viggo and I am the founder of Paper Theory Patterns. I am originally from New Zealand but have been living and working in London as a professional pattern cutter for the last 13 years. I got sick of the fast pace of Fashion week, not to mention a serious dose of the guilts contributing to what I felt was an unsustainable industry – so in 2016 I decided to start my own pattern brand. Paper Theory was created in a quest to help others who, like myself wanted to get as far away as possible from the fast fashion system – but didn't want to leave fashion altogether. I sell simple, minimalist sewing patterns but always with interesting cuts and shapes so others can create their own slow fashion wardrobes.

Talk to us a little about the creation process- from idea to final product. How big is your team?

My team consists of only myself, so obviously that has a big impact on the way I work. It means my processes aren't always linear and can be a little all over the place and my day to day tasks will vary depending on my mood. Most of my designs are born from gaps in my personal wardrobe. Instead of worrying about the trends and what's on the catwalk – I worry about what pieces I need in my wardrobe to make my life easier, more comfortable and more functional. The biggest benefit to having a team of one, is not having to convince anyone else of my ideas. I figure if I'm in need of something that's chic and easy – someone else will be looking for that too.

What do you love most about having your own business?

When I worked in the fashion industry, I didn't have much say on the projects I worked on.

Sometimes I had to work with brands and influencers I didn't feel comfortable with, use manufacturing processes I didn't agree with and I was always having to compromise somewhere. Now I can choose to focus my energy on topics I think are important, I can choose who I collaborate with and what direction I want to take.

Having the freedom to create a business that celebrates people over profit is an extremely privileged position to be in and I never get sick of seeing how happy my patterns can make some people. On the surface, making sewing patterns is just a process of pushing geometry and body measurements around on paper – however the real-lifeimplications mean so much more to my customers. I've had emails from multiple people saying they've never been able to buy anything off the rack in a store that has ever fit them well and making one of my patterns is the first time they've ever felt good in clothes. Enabling other people to make their own clothes gives them choice, power and autonomy and I'm eternally grateful I get to spend my days making that kind of impact in the world.

As a child, what was your first encounter and memory of beauty?

I have very vivid memories of my mother getting ready for work in the mornings when I was small. She used to swish out of the house in a long black trench coat and a heady cloud of hairspray and Chanel No5 (I am a child of the early 80s) I always thoughtshe looked so beautiful and powerful and I remember thinking she must have been off to do very important things. I still love the silhouettes of that time period and while its not intentional, many of my customers comment that they feel strong 80s workwear vibes in the cut ofmy patterns.

Can you talk us through a failure or a setback in your business that you learned from or an experience that helped improve your business.

When I was first setting up Paper Theory, I was trying to do everything myself. I was having a particular problem with one of the digital aspects of selling online and I spent all day and all night for WEEKS trying to figure out a solution to my problem and testing out my hopeful theories. When I was ready to throw the whole idea of starting my own business away, I finally asked a friend for their opinion and with nothing more than a quick glance he told me what the obvious answer was. I felt like a real dummy. Not because I wasn't able to figure it out, but because it wasn't obvious to me to ask for help earlier. I've always been fiercely independent, but it can often be at my detriment. Learning to ask for help with my weaknesses instead of trying to hide them has been a game changer for me.

Heavy Weight Linen

Name a book that you've recently read which inspired you and why?

I recently read the book "Natives" by Akala which is a discussion about Race and Class in the British Empire. It's strange to think how strongly the words of a half British, half Jamaican Male Rapper would resonate with me, but as someone who is also mixed race the way he breaks down his identity within the confines of Imperialism really answered a lot of questions

I had often wondered about myself. As someone with a creative career, it made me realise that a lot of my education in the arts was taught through a European lens, and it has really inspired me to delve more deeply into exploring the art of my Polynesian Ancestry.

Specifically, I'm really inspired to learn more about our strong history of textile arts and begin incorporating some of those skills and ideologies into my day to day creative practice.

What was the first thing you ever remember making on your own? Tell us about this memory.

I used to customise my sneakers when I was 8 or 9 years old. I was desperate for a pair of nikes but my parents wouldn't buy them for me so I would draw big nike swooshes on the side of my plimsolls and decorate them with marker pen. I was certain I had tricked everyone, and I thought I had the fanciest shoes in school but looking back I don't think anyone even noticed and I was probably the only 8 year old who was so obsessed with their wardrobe.

Do you have a mentor or a muse?

Absolutely the musician Patti Smith. Other than how good she looks in a crisp white shirt, I find her unapologetic need for self-expression to be really brave and inspiring.

My favourite quote of hers that has a recurring impact on my work is:

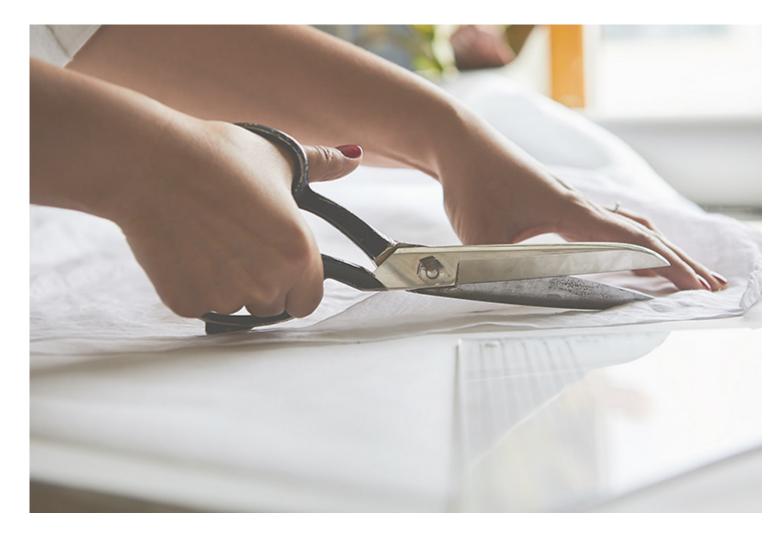

"Build a good name. Keep your name clean. Don't make compromises. Don't worry about making a bunch of money or being successful. Be concerned with doing good work. And make the right choices and protect your work. And if you can build a good name, eventually that name will be its own currency."

Whenever I'm being indecisive or wavering over direction I listen to some Patti Smith and things seem to sort themselves out.

How important is social media to your business?

It's very important. Social media gives us a platform to let the world know who we are and what we stand for. It's a powerful tool that ordinary people like me wouldn't have had access to only 10 years ago. Obviously, it comes with its own host of problems, but the flip side is there's never been an easier time to start your own business, nor a faster way to find your people and community.

Do you have a community of crafters / makers around you or do you find you are on your own?

90% of my day I'm alone in the studio with a pair of headphones on.

However, I work in a big building that was once an old industrial warehouse, it has since been repurposed to house many other artist studios which is great as I don't find a lot of my inspiration for clothing comes from fashion. I'm far more inspired by other creative disciplines and love seeing what the painter next door to me is working on. I love to see how a ceramist is dealing with texture and weight, or what the carpenter down the hall is working on. I love the idea that we are all grappling with the same world and the shitstorm that is politics in 2019, but we all have different crafts to work through these ideas with.

What is the best and the hardest part about being your own boss?

Freedom and flexibility to create my own work schedule is definitely the best part! I passionately hated having to ask permission to take a holiday. However, the worst part about being your own boss is the other side of the same coin. I have to work really hard on my self-discipline and meeting my own deadlines. Discipline doesn't come naturally for me, and without anyone to answer to, it's that much harder. All it takes is a little sunshine and my willpower for staying in the studio wanes. I go through extreme phases of high and low productivity and I'm learning it's a waste of time beating myself up too much when I don't get everything on my to do list done.

What does sustainability mean to you?

Generally, when I hear sustainability being spoken about in a marketing sense – It means nothing at all. The amount of greenwashing and tokenism when talking about sustainability in 2019 is pretty intense and usually it's just a tagline for increasing sales.

But on a personal level, sustainability means everything to me. Wanting to live a "sustainable" life is the sole reason I left the fashion industry and set up Paper Theory.

Years ago, when I first became aware of how bad things were getting, I was mostly concerned with things like choosing organic vegetables and fabrics, and recycling plastic.

But these days, I realise more than ever we have to look at the problem on a wider, global level and not as something produced by the actions of individuals. The collapse of the planet is a product of dysfunctional socioeconomic systems. I think these systems are upheld by colonialism, capitalism, sexism and the like. I don't think without some major system changes we can achieve a truly sustainable planet. Finding ways my business can help disrupt those unhelpful systems takes up the majority of my time and focus.

What does success mean to you?

I'm not always sure – my definition of success changes every day. Some days I don't think I'll be a success unless I fix all the problems of the world. Other days I feel immensely successful just for making it through to the end of the day alive.

Heavy Weight Linen

What have you chosen to make out of FS linen and why?

I've chosen to make the latest Paper Theory pattern – the Miller trousers out of the FS heavy weight natural linen, mostly for practical reasons – I'm actually 6 and a half months pregnant and suddenly Autumn has appeared. I haven't been able to fit into any of my trousers since I was about 12 weeks pregnant and I'm starting to get cold ankles because the only things I can still fit in my wardrobe are summer dresses! I'm desperate for a comfortable pair of trousers and I think that particular linen looks comfortable, but also looks polished enough than I can still wear the trousers when I need to look a little sharper.

FS NATURAL Softened 100% Linen

Tara made Paper Theory Miller trousers with FS NATURAL Softened Heavy Weight Linen

CATEGORY

- 1. COMMUNITY
- 2. CURATED BY YOU

Category

- 1. COMMUNITY
- 2. CURATED BY YOU

Date Created August 3, 2023

Author

masha